

For Our Learners with Limited Repertoires: A Call for a Lifetime of Pragmatic Language

Patrick McGreevy

The communication and language programs of many learners with limited repertoires emphasize grammar and syntax. These learners are taught to 'connect' words when he exhibits few words to connect. Dr. McGreevy will describe how these programs emphasize form over function and leave learners with little to no useful skills. He will also describe pragmatic language programs, which, when taught to fluency, result in useful repertoires that will last a lifetime.
